3. Create a new document. Photoshop's preferred software image format is TIFF (Tagged Image File Format), although Photoshop can also save as JPEG, but it's a bit of a pain to work with JPEGs in most applications. Photoshop's default file name is `_Untitled.psd._`

4. Open the Canvas Size dialog box. It is the last of the Help menus with a tiny version of the familiar Photoshop icon at the top of the menu bar (see Figure 3-3). It's a drop-down menu that enables you to set the canvas size of your images.

FIGURE 3-3: The Canvas Size dialog box enables you to set the image size of your canvas (the page on which you can manipulate the image). The `_canvas size_` is the image size. You can set the canvas to be much larger or smaller than the pixel width and height of your image file (not to be confused with the `_display size_` of the image). `_Display size_` is what the program actually displays on the screen. Figure 3-4a shows the Standard (640x480) size. FIGURE 3-4: Choose a canvas size in the Canvas Size dialog box. Simply click the dialog box's arrow at the top of the menu (refer to Figure 3-3) and navigate to the Size option. Choose the option that best represents your needs and take a look at the display on the right. On the Size tab, shown in Figure 3-4b, you may see a drop-down list of the current options. If that box is clicked, the values shown in the grid box next to it become the current values for the box, which is useful for setting a value that will be sticky. When you choose a canvas size other than the default, the image may appear blurry and your entire canvas may appear zoomed out. To fix this issue, select Application Options from the top menu bar, shown in Figure 3-4c, and then select the Preserve Aspect Ratio option from the Preserve Aspect Ratio menu. Photoshop will then retain the same proportions — horizontal to vertical — when resizing. *

Maintain aspect ratio: Enables you to keep the proportions of the aspect ratio of the image when it's resized.

* Preserve type: Automatically maintains the type and

First, Hi-Performance Engines by Ford will launch late this year, which will include two engines, the 2.6-liter EcoBoost and the 2.3-liter EcoBoost. Those EcoBoosts are expected to drive more than 10 percent of Ford sales in Europe in 2012 and 2013. The 2.3-liter is likely to power the company's various World Class vehicles and small cars, which are likely to be a big focus in Europe. It will go into production in July 2012. Then, EcoBoost 3.0s will go into production in mid-2013. It will be a 3.5-liter V-6, which is expected to offer power somewhere between 250-300 horsepower. This will likely be used to go head-to-head with the BMW 335i and Audi S4. The EcoBoost engines are probably the best deal for customers, since they will cost a lot less than a regular engine. They are still very fuel-efficient, though, and are certainly a viable alternative to the gas-guzzling 4.6-liter V-8s used in today's performance vehicles.

But if you are stuck in a depressive episode and the DBT or other ERP approaches don't work, I would suggest that it might be worth your while to consider an intervention that combines elements of behavioral and cognitive techniques with self-compassion. I'm not entirely sure that this will actually be helpful to you, but let me tell you a little bit about what I'm up to. I've been writing this column for a long time, and I've learned some things over the course of that time. Not only did I learn some things, but I've also seen my view of the world alter a great deal as I've come to see more clearly how culture

Q: Codeigniter query with `$this->db->insert_id()` I want to use `insert_id()` function inside a Codeigniter function. When I use `insert_id()` as such: `function insert_record($data) { $this->db->insert_id(); return $this->db->insert('tbl_table',$data); }` I get: Fatal error: Call to undefined function `db_insert_id()` in line 2 Which makes sense, because from within a function my `$this->db` is not global and does not have access to the global `$this->db` and `$this->db->insert_id()`. However I would like to use this method because its much faster than writing my own MySQL function. Is there anyway I can use this method from within a function in Codeigniter and still get the insert_id value?

Thanks, A: Before that function insert_record($data) { $this->db->set('var', $data); $this->db->insert('tbl_table'); $id = $this->db->insert_id(); // global. } After that function insert_record($data) { $this->db->set('var', $data); $this->db->insert('tbl_table'); return $this->db->insert_id(); // dynamic. } A: If you wish to make use of insert_id() with your database method from the class you may get the inserted ID from the return value. function insert_record($data) { $this->db->insert('tbl_table', $data); $id = $this->db->insert_id(); return $id; } Or the safest way to avoid the $this->db-> insert_id() method getting called as a global. function insert_record($data) { $this->db->set('var', $data); $this->db->insert('tbl_table'); return $this
