I am not very familiar with this tool, but it does seem to do what you want. In case you need to format your clipboard, I found a Stack Overflow question that has two good answers: Formatting the Windows clipboard using Python (And the other good one was using the clipboard library I mentioned before...). You can define another action to copy the selected text to your clipboard when you press the "Save" button, or just append to the current action (1st answer in the question). Shaping electrospun nanofibers: three different strategies. Nanofibers are solid micro- and nanostructures of low aspect ratio that are able to mimic the features of the extracellular matrix of the native tissue. They are used in regenerative medicine and drug delivery, and often they are manufactured by electrospinning, a technique of which the control of the size and shape of the fibers is essential. In this paper, we describe three different methods to produce fibers by electrospinning. We show how to achieve the formation of nanofibers with various morphologies and with different geometries, including the ability to produce core-shell and continuous fibers. The control of the core-shell formation is of great relevance for drug delivery applications where the ability to control the release can be tuned by the specific geometrical configuration.Decompressive and supportive procedures for cervical spinal cord injuries in a prototypic collegiate rugby union player with training and competitive goals. To examine the utility of cervical spinal cord injury with acute, symptomatic and progressive neurological deficit in the context of a collegiate rugby union player with training and competitive goals. Non-mandated, non-therapeutic, retrospective cohort study of in- and out-of-hospital presentation and care of acute, symptomatic, and progressive cervical spinal cord injury of a university rugby player with training and competitive goals. Over the course of a single season, 20 rugby players sustained 20 acute, symptomatic, and progressive neurological cervical injuries. Twelve (60%) required in-hospital surgical decompression (52% of all players). Thirteen (65%) players required further medical treatment, of which only one (5
